Carnegie Library

Pittsburgh steel tycoon and philanthropist Andrew Carnegie left a legacy of having funded over 2,500 libraries around the world, including four in Nashville. Today, only two Carnegie libraries remain in Nashville (the East and North branches of the Metro Public Library system). The East Branch was opened in 1919 thanks to a $25,000 grant from Andrew Carnegie – but on the condition that the city would raise $2,500 a year for maintenance and upkeep. Fortunately, Nashville came through, and the library is still a fully functioning branch located just a block away from Five Points (check the Nashville Public Library website at <http://www.library.nashville.org> for up-to-date hours).
